SYMBOLS OF VICTORY.

We quote the following from the Boston Transcript:

The sixth number of "Every Saturday" contains a paper entitled "A Night in a Workhouse," the publication of which, in the columns of the Fall Mill Gazette, has created the greatest excitement. It appears that the writer of the article, a Tramp, says he was born and lived as a vagrant, and obtained quarters for the night in the Lambeth Workhouse, for the purpose of ascertaining how the London poor are treated in that highly respectable institution. The record of misery is sad and revolting to the heart. This is a work that ought to be read by every man who is a member of a family, or who is about to enter upon the path of a hundred millions who are crowded into this one brief page torn from real life. There is not a conception of Drapé's "The Spectator," more grotesquely horrible than the one which the contributor to the Fall Mill Gazette has painted here.

A copy of this article is ready made to his hand, such characters as Drapé himself has hitherto dreamed of depicting. With a pen as brave as it is brilliant he has laid bare to the English public an abuse which could exist nowhere but in London. Of course those revolutions of society, which have taken place in England, have not stopped there; and will not stop there. Sir Charles Baudelaire's onslaught on the prison system, no article of the kind has caused such a furor as "A Night in a Workhouse."

Every number of Every Saturday is stereotyped, and back numbers can always be furnished.
